took a serious view and imposed the more severe punishment of striking off the roll. The question is whether it was proper and correct for the Committee to arrive at a finding of instigation, conspiracy and aiding without the proper record of evidence before it. In our opinion it was not.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Sulaiman C. Navarednam; Mah-Kok & Din.

POH AH CHOO v. TAN SIEW GIM & ORS.

[O.C.J. (Edgar Joseph Jr. J.) April 3 & 12, 1985]

[Penang – Suit No. 295 of 1984]

Probate and Administration – Letters of administration extracted in 1964 – Suit filed in 1984 – Ex parte injunction – Delay not explained – Application to discharge injunction – Fresh application on notice – Merits.

The plaintiff claims that as the lawful secondary wife of a deceased who died intestate on February 26, 1963, she is entitled to a share in his estate. The first defendant is the lawful wife of the deceased and the other five defendants are the lawful children of that marriage. The plaintiff obtained an ex parte interlocutory injunction against the defendants jointly or severally from dealing with certain property forming part of the estate of the deceased.

The first and second defendants extracted the letters of administration of the deceased's estate as long ago as 1964 and the suit was filed in 1984. The plaintiff, when applying for the ex parte order, made no attempt to explain what was apparently an inordinate delay. The defendants applied to discharge the ex parte order.

Held: (1) there was in this case a non-disclosure of material facts in that the plaintiff had omitted to explain at the ex parte stage, the lapse of nearly 20 years on her part in the institution of the suit. The ex parte order would therefore have to be set aside irrespective of the merits;

(2) the plaintiff, however, does not become anathema for all purposes. She may make fresh application, on notice, which will be considered on its merits;

(3) the application for discharge would be allowed with costs.

Cases referred to:

(1) Thomas A. Edison Ltd. v. Bullock (1912) 15 C.L.R. 679.
(2) Sherwell v. Combined Incandescent Mentles Syndicate Ltd. [1907] W.N. 211, 212.
(3) A.G. v. Liverpool Corporation (1835) 40 E.R. 342, 356.
(4) Rex v. Kensington Income Tax Commissioners [1917] 1 K.B. 486, 504.
(5) Re a debtor (No. 75N of 1982, Warrington), ex parte the debtor v. National Westminster Bank plc & Anor. [1983] 3 All E.R. 545, p. 551 d.
(6) Castelli v. Cook (1849) 7 Hare 89; 68 E.R. 36.
(7) Dalglish v. Jarvie (1850) 2 Mac. & G. 231; 42 E.R. 89.

CIVIL SUIT.

K. Balasundaram for the plaintiffs.
David Choong for the defendants.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Edgar Joseph Jr. J. : This was a defendants' application for discharge of an ex parte interlocutory injunction ("the Ex Parte Order") granted by me and arising out of a suit by the plaintiff who claims that as the lawful Secondary Wife of one Ooi Guan Lee ("the deceased") who died intestate on February 26, 1963 she is entitled to a share in his Estate.

The first defendant is the lawful wife of the deceased. The second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth defendants are the lawful children of that marriage.

The Ex Parte Order restrained the defendants whether jointly or severally from in any manner selling, charging, leasing or otherwise howsoever dealing with certain lands and hereditaments specified therein and which form part of the Estate of the deceased.

Although Letters of Administration in respect of the Estate of the deceased were extracted as long ago as September 4, 1964 in favour of the first and second defendants, it was not until July 4, 1984 that the Suit herein was instituted so that, on the face of it, the claim therein was in the nature of a very stale demand; yet, when applying for the Ex Parte Order, no attempt was made by the plaintiff to explain what was apparently an inordinate delay.

Not unexpectedly, therefore, at the inter partes stage, counsel for the defendants, when moving for the discharge of the Ex Parte Order, stressed the want of promptitude on the part of the plaintiff in instituting the Suit and seeking the Ex Parte Order.

What, however, I considered was more to the point, was whether, at the time when she sought the Ex Parte Order, the plaintiff had brought forward all material facts which the defendants might presumably have brought forward in their defence to the application had they been present. As was said by Isaacs J. in Thomas A. Edison Ltd. v. Bullock[1] at page 682:

> "Uberrima fides is required, and the party inducing the court to act in the absence of the other party fails in his obligation unless he supplies the place of the absent party to the extent of bringing forward all the material facts which that party would presumably have brought forward in his defence to that application. Unless that is done, the implied condition upon which the court acts in forming its judgment is unfulfilled and the order so obtained must almost invariably fail."

Accordingly, the plaintiff, who was represented, could reasonably have anticipated that had her application been made inter partes the defendants would have raised an objection founded on delay since the essence of an application for an interlocutory injunction is that "it should be made with promptness" – Sherwell v. Combined Incandescent Mentles Syndicate Ltd.[2] It follows that an explanation for the long delay should have been, but was not, offered right from the start, that is to say, at the ex parte stage. The omission was, to my mind, most material.

I say so because the question whether the fact omitted is material does not depend on establishing that the undisclosed matters in question would, if disclosed, have been decisive against the party who has not made proper disclosure. It is enough to show that it is relevant and might foreseeably have been regarded by the Court as of weight; so for example, there is authority for saying that the test is to ask whether there has been any "misstatement or omission of any important facts": A.G. v. Liverpool Corporation,[3] Rex v. Kensington Income Tax Commissioners.[4]

The fact that at the inter partes stage the plaintiff was overflowing with candour and offered a lengthy explanation in her affidavit in opposition to the application now before me does not in the circumstances assist her. It is therefore unnecessary for me to consider those explanations, the gist of which was that she was the victim of a concealed fraud practised upon her by the first and second defendants so that she first became aware that her rights were being infringed only as recently as September, 1983.

I might add that in arriving at the above conclusion I have not overlooked the extent of the duty of an applicant applying ex parte as explained by Warner J. in Re A Debtor (No. 75N of 1982, Warrington), ex parte the debtor v. National Westminster Bank plc. and another appeal.[5] In that case His Lordship described it thus:

> "The rule in Ex p Princess de Polignac exists because, by definition, on an ex parte application the person against whom the order is sought is absent. It is accordingly the duty of the applicant to inform the court of any facts which he knows which might tell in that person's favour. But the applicant is under no obligation to place before the court every fact that might reinforce his own case."

Accordingly, I am satisfied that there was here a non-disclosure of material facts in that the plaintiff had omitted to explain, at the ex parte stage, the lapse of nearly twenty years on her part in the institution of the suit.

The Ex Parte Order will therefore have to be set aside irrespective of the merits: Castelli v. Cook[6] and Dalglish v. Jarvi.[7]

The plaintiff, however, does not become anathema for all purposes. She may, if she wishes, make application de novo for an interlocutory injunction (see Thomas A. Edison Ltd. v. Bullock, supra); but, on any further application, proceedings should take place on notice, rather than ex parte, and, if so, full and fair disclosure must be made. The application will then be considered on its merits.

In the result, I allow the application for discharge of the Ex Parte Order with costs.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Shamsuriah & Balasundaram; Lim, Lim & Oon.

OVERSEA-CHINESE BANKING CORPORATION LTD. v. NATIONAL UNION OF BANK EMPLOYEES & ANOR.

[O.C.J. (Harun J.) January 3 & April 18, 1985]

[Kuala Lumpur – Originating Motion No. A53 of 1984]

Administrative Law – Certiorari – Application to quash award of Industrial Court ordering reinstatement of bank employee – Court in error and order of reinstatement superfluous.

Industrial Law – Employment – Application to quash award of Industrial Court ordering reinstatement of bank employee – Whether "transfer" subject matter of "trade dispute" – "connected with" – Meaning of – Industrial Relations Act 1967, ss. 2, 16(1), 26(2) & 32.